Note: Give plenty of sun, or only light high shade. Plant crowns at least 2" deep, and mulch for the first winter. An occasional late fall dressing of manure thereafter, pays well. More frequent division of these than of the Siberians is required in most situations—time to do it when they stop blooming, or get crowded for room, or overshadowed by other plants. A California customer writes of getting 90 big bls., some 14" across, on a small plot, by adding plenty of humus to the soil (peat moss, old manure, compost, leaf mold) and hosing the bed about every 10 days in dry weather. Fortunately for us, they grow and bloom well here in our good meadowland soil with almost no special attention, except division now and then. Soil must be on the acid side, or at least neutral. Use no lime.
